Agenda

• What led us here
• Key role for faith development professionals
• What’s in the box? (What does this pilot program include?)
• Time span of the pilot program
• Q & A
What Led Us Here

• Approached by UU religious educators in 2017; their request resonated with us.
• Accountability team led by Paula Cole Jones.
• We are piloting a process, not a product.
• Experimental; a prototype. You are invited to be among the group to work with it & tell us how to make it better.
Key Role for Faith Development Professionals

• YOU are uniquely positioned to lead a process we hope will guide a deepening and strengthening of anti-racism work in your congregations.
Key Role for Faith Development Professionals

• Your own growth is part of the process. Wherever you are in anti-racism work, your willingness to grow will guide and inspire your congregational team.
What’s in the Box?
(What does the pilot program include?)

• Guidance to build a congregational accountability team to use assessment tool and collaborate to plan next steps
• Regular meetings of facilitated peer support group
• Opportunity to give feedback on your process and help shape the program
Using the Assessment Tool

- How and what will you assess?
- What lens(es) do you bring or encourage others to use?
- How do you determine the members of your assessment team?
- How do you define a scope for your assessment?
consider when grassroots organizing within the congregation created change outside of current formal or informal power structures.

- Describe the ways your race and cultural background influence your position in your congregation.
- Identify how stereotypes have helped or limited people’s power and influence in your congregation.
- What authority does the religious educator have in determining and implementing strategies for multicultural growth?
- Describe a time when you’ve chosen multicultural solidarity over mono-cultural norms.
- Describe a time when grassroots organizing within the congregation created change outside of current formal or informal power structures.
C. Implicit, Explicit, and Null Curriculum

Religious education and spiritual development programs include three kinds of curricula. What is known to all and directly named in the external environment is the explicit curriculum. The values and expectations which are not formally taught, but nevertheless learned, make up the implicit curriculum. The concepts, skills, and experiences that are left out form the null curriculum. (Eisner, 1985). The null curriculum often exists as unexamined norms that replicate the dominant paradigm. The whole experience in a Unitarian Universalist community educates all ages and is not neutral in its influence to affect growth.

- How are children, youth, young adults and families of color part of the process of curricular choices?
Initiating the Pilot

• You needn’t be the “dismantling white supremacy” expert.
• Inform minister, RE chair, other leaders that you’ve applied to pilot the UUA’s new accountability assessment tool to work toward dismantling white supremacy.
• Leverage the pilot to kick-start a commitment to dismantle white supremacy.
